Taking skills shortages head on at quarries

Published: 25 May 2018

Skills development in the surface mining profession has been shunted squarely into the international spotlight by South Africa's opencast mining industry representative association, Aspasa, with its awareness-raising presentation delivered to an international audience of peers in Spain recently.

The Global Aggregates Information Network (GAIN) focuses on quarrying and surface mining industry associations and numerous topics raised by its members and discusses solutions and best practices from its members around the world. Through sharing the country's own challenges relating to skills development within the industry, it is hoped that discussions can be focused on the issue and shared solutions be sought.
